RE: LPFM

Dear Sir/ Madam,

The genuine advantage of LPFM is that it provides real local programming without interfering with the large commercial stations. At the present time there are no options: big companies own the airwaves. Everyone else is priced out. This in effect has squashed freedom of speech, curtailed creativity and forced those without a voice to become pirate stations, thus creating legal hassles for the FCC. LPFM solves all that and gives a way for communities to have a local, legal voice, without disturbing the existing stations. I ask the FCC to expand the scope of LPFM, reduce the outrageous, unscientific distance requirements between stations and reopen applications that have been denied due to the old rules.

Thank you,

Douglas Glick
